Screen going Bonkers

The touch screen of my ICOM 5100 was going bonkers. It was acting if I was touching the screen and doing it very rapidly. I fought with it for weeks and researched it on the internet. I found there were other people having the same symptoms. You can buy a screen for less than $100.

At the bike ride Saturday, I was trying to put the radio in cross band mode. I accidentally hit the Touch Screen Calibration mode (Menu / Other). I couldn't find a way to return to the menu so I completed the process of calibration. That seemed to solve the problem! Later in the week, it went crazy again (this time just a little). I ran the calibration process once more and so far everything is fine. I am not sure why it would be losing the screen calibration. This may not be the root of the problem, but it sure has made a significant impact.

Scout O Rama

We have been invited to attend Scout O Rama at Spring Lake Park on April 30. So warm up the radios. Be prepared not to have trees to hang antennas or power for radios. This is usually a real test for emergency. More detail will be coming.

NWS Shreveport Partners,

As we head into our primary severe weather season, we want to make sure you are aware of some of the resources out there to help you make weather-related decisions.

IDSS Forecast Point

At this link, you can get forecast information for a user identified point anywhere in your county or parish on a day-by-day, hour-by-hour basis. The interface is pretty self-explanatory, but you can get a world of forecast information for your location with just a few clicks. This is a great tool if you have outdoor activities and would like to know when the best chances for rain are during the day/night along with specific temperature information during a specified timeframe.

Graphical Hazardous Weather Outlook

(<https://www.weather.gov/erh/ghwo?wfo=shv>)

This experimental page is a decision support service for your situational awareness that supports preparedness and response efforts prior to and during hazardous weather. This service provides decision makers with convenient access to potential weather hazard information by graphically depicting the risk of weather hazards out through seven days.
